Dear Aerospace Engineer,

I regret to inform you that your position will be terminated one month from today. Technological change, which is supposed to be our business, has taken our major backer, Dynacron, out of the game, and all projects here are on an indefinite hold.

Dynacron's main competitor, Enterprise Aerospace, has just innovated some breakthrough work in embedded computer on-board subsystems that has had a major negative impact on Dynacron's stock. So we are grounded.

Your work here was nothing short of brilliant, and you've made quite a name for yourself. If the rumours about Enterprise are not wildly exaggerated they'll be looking for people soon. Perhaps we will work together again.

Good luck,

Hannah Browne
Research Director
