Role Description

You graduated from high school with good marks all-round, especially in English, science, and health. You enjoyed sports and the physical education teacher made a major impression on you with her lectures about the importance of lifestyle and diet, which your common sense told you had to be true. You helped her organize a really cool information campaign about smoking. You're a very sociable person who loves to kick back and party, but are basically moderate, responsible, and practical.

During high school you volunteered at a senior's retirement village, mostly keeping people company. One old lady who'd been a nurse and travelled a lot during the war became a special friend. You loved listening to her stories. She suggested you consider a career in medicine and said you had the interpersonal skills, the perseverance and the stamina to make a great nurse. You are empathetic and responsible. She offered to pay you for helping her with her exercises and her housekeeping as long as you stayed in school.

You enrolled in a university hospital program. For the first couple of years you learned a lot of biology, chemistry, pharmacology and physiology as well as a whole new medical vocabulary. Then you started working as a Nurse's Assistant and were exposed to every aspect of healthcare from the new babies clinic to the emergency room and the intensive care unit while you learned medical theory and practice.

You decided to specialize in gerontology, the care of elderly people. You feel they have earned the best care the system can offer and besides, you like their stories. Your teamwork and communications skills have helped you make the most of your training and you received your Bachelor's Degree in Nursing with honours. Your old friend attended your graduation and was so proud it brought tears to your eyes. You will continue your education, but for now you're excitedly checking the job listings with the rest of the new graduates. The world awaits!

You are 22 years old.
