Role Description

You graduated from high school with good marks all-around, especially in English, social studies, and math. You served the student council as Secretary for two years, being an organized person with good good computer skills. You enjoyed planning events and activities, especially the logistics and always did up floor plans for information fairs and other events. Artistic types who worked on posters and decorations found you the easiest organizer to talk to because you like to sketch ideas too.

A big commercial development was proposed for your area and you spoke at a meeting called for stakeholders to voice their concerns. You explained how important the green belt behind your neighbourhood was to local youth. You all played there as kids, and teenagers appreciated the bike path as a safe detour around dangerously congested main roads. You were all excited about the new shopping centre and cinemas, but losing access to the river was a heavy price. Wasn't there a compromise?

The project went ahead. Before long before people were afraid to let children play freely because of the traffic. You felt something important had been lost and wrote an essay about it with a sketch of an alternative plan. Your social studies teacher sat down to talk to you one day at lunch. He felt you should consider studying Urban Planning because your commitment to community values was obvious. You also have the communications skills and the knack for plans and diagrams to excel at the job.

You enrolled in the Urban Planning program and began studying towns and cities, how they function, and their problems. You have decided to aim for your Master's Degree five years from now and have been recommended for a co-op education program. You are looking for a position that can give you hands-on experience in the challenge of making towns and cities work for the people who live in them.

You are 21 years old.
