Role Description

In high school you had excellent grades in science and math. You really enjoyed subjects like Biology and Chemistry. You always brought a smiling face to the table and were very energetic in school. Friendship is important to you and you are always there to comfort a friend when they need it. When presenting in front of the class you always received the highest grade and loudest applause from your classmates.

Your parents have a whole picture album full of you playing nurse with your stuffed animals. Dressed in all white with your plastic stethoscope you had all your teddy bears bandaged up after they had come into the "emergency room". You loved the thought of a being a nurse; so much in fact that you were a nurse for Halloween three years in a row!

You really loved to care for and help people so you got a part-time job all through high school working at a nursing home. You were responsible for serving dinner and cleaning up afterwards. You loved to stop and chat with the residence and hear the interesting stories they used to tell. You felt good knowing that you had helped make a difference.

When you graduated you headed straight for your post secondary education in nursing. You talked to your boss at the nursing home and she was nice enough to let you stay on pay roll to help you pay for your tuition. You went to University and completed a four-year program in nursing. School was hard but your hard work paid off with good grades and friendships.

You are 22 years old.
