Role Description

You graduated high school with high marks in the sciences and math. Your teacher's complimented your outstanding oral presentations. You were a quiet, respectful person with a group of close knit friends. High school seemed to fly by for you and you realized after graduation that you were still unsure of what you would like to do.

Your father being a military man had you enlisted in your local military company for youth. The military was like a second home for you and your troop was like a second family. Before you knew it you were promoted to sergeant! You were made responsible for a troop you were in charge from something small like making sure their uniforms were presentable to leading them in drills. You were part of this company since you were twelve and in your last years of high school you worked at the summer camps.

During the summer after graduation you became good friends with one of the officers that you worked under. When you confessed you had no idea what you wanted to do with your future he suggested joining the military. You gave it a good deal of consideration, after all you had been in a military atmosphere all of your life.

Later on that summer you were enlisted. There you heard about the Physician assistant program that the military was offering. You were always interested in medicine and thought this would be a good career track for you. You graduated as a Physician Assistant and with a Bachelor of Science degree. You had found the right track for you. School was interesting and fun for you and you were looking forward to starting your career.

You were 22 years old.
