Role Description

You graduated high school with good marks in sciences and English. You especially loved your chemistry class. You found it so interesting how an atom bonded slightly differently to another atom can change the whole composition of the chemical. You knew that a career in science would be right for you.

Whenever you were assigned a group project in high school, you always knew how you could help. You're intelligent, but not overly outgoing. You had plenty of ideas of what could be done but were more comfortable letting someone else take that role. You worked well in a team by completing your own responsibilities despite the challenges.

You weren't the most popular person in school but you got along with everyone on some level. People always said that you were very kind and understanding. You enjoy helping people and knowing that you're doing some good.

You went to college for a few years and took a Pharmacy Technician program. You knew right away that you had chosen the right program for you. You took courses in biology, chemistry and pharmacology and computer. You're now ready to use your new skills and knowledge for the benefit of others.

You are 23 years old.
