Role Description

You graduated high school with average grades but did well in English. Oral presentations were a definite strength. Everyone in your class always wanted to be part of your group for group projects. You were easy to get along with and always did your half and then some without complaint.

You counted down the days until your sixteenth birthday when you could write your first drivers test and studied extremely hard. You were always found with the driver's manual in your hand or backpack. The time came for your birthday and you begged your parents to take you that very morning. You couldn't wait to start driving!

You passed all the tests the first time and with flying colours! Your parents were so proud of you that they bought you your own car. It was up to you to pay for gas and maintain it so you found a part-time job working for a car dealership working as a car jockey and detailer. You loved to cruise around and your manager was always impressed with your driving skills.

You were still a little confused about what you wanted to do in life and were quite happy just making enough money at your job to keep up with car payments and gas. A friend of yours started working for a cab company and was having a blast. He told you to give it some consideration and you promised you would. A job you now had to get.

You are 22 years old.
