Role Description

You graduated high school with good marks in the sciences and math. You were also able to effectively communicate your point while writing papers and presenting class projects. As a child your parents being the adventurous type brought you on several camping trips which you took an immediate liking to. You never minded getting dirty if it meant you could breathe the fresh air.

You took a summer job as an aggregate resources hand at a local gravel pit. While working there you realized that this was the path you were supposed to be on. Your co-worker saw potential in you because you never quit until the job was done. He suggests you further your education in order to advance in the field.

Deciding to do just that, you go to college and take courses in environmental technology. Classes were challenging but you manage to pull through and getting assignments and projects in on time. The staff complimented you on your perseverance. School taught you a new way of viewing the world and solving problems.

After graduating you now have a diploma and a loan to pay off! You are looking for something to incorporate your new found knowledge and your love of the outdoors. You are a strong, able bodied person who loves dirt. Now it is time to hit up the classifieds and find yourself a job!

You are 22 years old.
