Role Description

You graduated high school with average marks in all your subjects but you were always interested in the sciences. You were voted captain of the hockey team by your teammates and coach because of your leadership and your ability to work well with so many different people.

You worked a part time job at your local arena when you weren't busy at practice. You loved everything about the arena, the cold, the smell, and the sounds of skates scratching the ice. You couldn't think of a better place to be. You were in charge of the canteen and sometimes as a special reward you got to drive the ice making machines.

Being captain of the hockey team and working at the rink you got to see some really cool stuff. Workers would come in and out of the rink with high tech equipment testing the air quality. During one of your practices you even got to help by wearing a special tag when on the ice. You got talking to one of the guys and he explained that the slightest thing could effect the air quality including the Zamboni.

Your chemistry teacher and you had some great conversations about the ventilation system of the laboratory where you did your work. The two of you would come up with a better system or a more efficient way to ventilate. He got you to really consider going to school to be an air technician. You took his advice and got yourself a degree in Environmental Sciences.

You are 24 years old.
