Role Description

Throughout high school you obtained good marks in all of your classes but achieved the best in math, science and English. Your teachers always looked forward to your oral presentations because you made them very interesting and entertaining while being able to convey your material so everyone could understand.

Your grandparents owned a farm and you were constantly over there. You loved working around the farm with the animals and machinery. You loved to help plant the crops and to help harvest later. As you grew up you went from volunteering at your grandparent's farm to becoming a hired hand. You worked there every spare minute you had saving up for school and just because you loved it.

In one biology chapter your class learned all about the environment and the impact that every person has on it. You were extremely interested in that impact and what you could do help save the planet. You stayed after school and talked with your teacher about the several different options that you had for your career option.

In the end the both of you thought that a degree in an agricultural program was right for you. With your love of the farm and the environment you couldn't think of a better choice that best fit you. You did well in school and with your last semester and some student debt you started to look for a job that would best suit you.

You are 23 years old.
