Role Description

In your high school yearbook it was mentioned that your best subjects were business, computer science and world studies. Your contribution to school spirit and your ability to motivate others to participate was recognized as you received numerous awards for your contribution to school council.

You received a scholarship to your college of choice where you went on to study business administration. Part of your program involved a one semester work placement and you thought it would be interesting to work with the city. You were accepted to work with city's new initiatives team. City staff knew that they would have a difficult time implementing new recycling regulations of household products. It was felt that it would be a costly initiative in this tough economic climate. You worked with the department manager and were able to demonstrate your high level of creativity, your ability to solve problems and to communicate effectively.

Your four months of placement seem to fly by. You felt like you were a permanent employee and you started to regret that your term was soon going to be ending. You were a valued employee and received a hand-written letter from your supervisor thanking you for all your hard work and dedication.

You graduated with a Diploma in Business Administration and received the Marketing Award. You are hoping to land a job very quickly. You wanted a job outside selling and one that offered a salary rather than just commission. Since you have quite a unique combination of skills and experience you know that landing a job should be relatively easy. You start looking.

You are 23 years old.
